We have investigated the nature of the inflammatory and ischemic changes observed after total nephrectomy in pigs. Total nephrectomy was performed on 31 pigs. Histologically, minimal tissue damage, characterized by tubular casts and mild inflammatory changes, was found at 24 h after operation. The histology of the spleen was similar to the control group at 24 h. At 72 h, the spleen showed signs of cytotoxic ischemia with shrinkage of the red pulp and a loss of lymphoid cells. At this time, the glomeruli showed tissue damage, with expanded Bowman's capsule, thickened glomerular basement membrane, and cellular debris within the mesangium. There was a two- to three-fold increase in the number of T-cells and macrophages compared with the control group. At 72 h, after perfusion fixation the spleen showed a threefold increase in the number of infiltrating macrophages within the white pulp, with patchy glomerular sclerosis, mild interstitial inflammation, and infarcted kidney. The white pulp contained a large number of histiocytes expressing ED1. These infiltrating macrophages returned to normal numbers after 3 wk. At 6 months, minimal lesions were observed. It was concluded that the temporary parenchymal changes in the spleen were more pronounced than that in the kidney. The inflammatory changes resolved by 3 wk after nephrectomy, whereas the ischemic changes persisted.
